We work closely with our clients to make sure that their creative and practical goals are upheld throughout the project. Our exceptional researchers, writers, editors, architects, and designers immerse themselves in the exhibit subject, becoming familiar with its every nuance. Our practical knowledge of fabrication and installation gives us expertise in designing to a budget, and a solid grasp of effective alternate techniques and available materials.

Our staff offers backgrounds in museum curatorial and directorship positions, in education and scriptwriting, anthropology and history, and diverse design experience in theater, architecture, graphics, film fine arts, interior design and industrial/product design. Company Description: Layne Laboratories has provided zoos, wildlife rehabilitators, universities, and the pet industry with quality live and frozen feeder rodents since 1992. We offer outstanding quality, consistent availability, and extremely competitive pricing.

All animals are raised on sight in our new 45,000 sq. ft. facility located in Arroyo Grande, California. With an emphasis on sanitation, nutrition, and a low stress environment, our laboratories are fully automated to control temperature, humidity, light cycles, and water availability. Every colony is cleaned and inspected daily. The result is a healthier animal, high in nutritional value and robust in size.

Animals destined for sale as frozen food are euthanized in a carbon dioxide chamber and frozen immediately. After they are completely frozen, they are sealed and stored properly to prevent freezer burn. All of our animals are individually frozen, with their tails tucked neatly under their body. This helps to insure that no urine or feces will be included when they are packaged. Both live and frozen orders are processed immediately and guaranteed to meet our customers' satisfaction.

Layne Laboratories is recognized throughout the industry for its quality animals, outstanding service, and genuine concern for individual customer needs. Bids, yearly contracts and purchase orders are welcome.
